MAY 2011

What are Graphic Novels?

There are numerous definitions for the term graphic novel. Creators, publishers, readers or collectors of graphic novels, may define them differently.

Books defined as Graphic Novels at St Paul's Grammar School are those which use pictures to tell their story, often in frames, and following a sequence in these frames.

Graphic novels are trade paperback or hardcover books consisting of work in comic-book form.

We have not defined comic strips as graphic novels, so Asterix and TinTin remain on the Fiction shelves.

Graphic novels may be book-length stories, collections of stories and works of non-fiction. This does not include collections of comic strips such as Garfield or Peanuts.

Many of our graphic novels run as a series, which we endeavour to support as long as the interest in these books is evident.

Graphic novels are a format and thus include many different genres.

Thus, we also have a collection of non-fiction Graphic Novels including Shakespeare, myths and legends and other interest areas. There are also reproductions of classic tales in Graphic Novel format in our collection.
